

Prompt: I learn like a _____ because of _____.

- ✓ I learn like a backpack because I can hold information in until things get heavy and everything falls out.
- ✓ I learn like a tree because I hold on to all the information but by autumn everything falls off.
- ✓ I learn like a guitar because the more you “play” the more I remember. But if you don’t play me enough. I can’t remember it. Basically you need to internalize information for me to get it.
- ✓ I learn like a caterpillar because I learn in different stages and need knowledge to grow.
- ✓ I learn like a flower because if you give me water (knowledge) I will grow and learn. If you don’t water me I will not grow and learn and I will fall apart.
- ✓ I learn like a monkey because I like to listen if there’s a prize, but if there’s no reward I’m usually not interested.
- ✓ I learn like a season because I know something for a certain amount of time but eventually I hardly remember it.
- ✓ I learn like a sand sifter because important (big) things stay in my head while less important (small) things fall through.
- ✓ I learn like a sponge because I soak in as much information as I can until my mind is saturated and can’t hold anymore for the time being.
- ✓ I learn like a quarterback because I do well when it doesn’t have pressure but doesn’t do well when I do.
- ✓ I learn like a tree because I stay there and do what I have to do until I get bored, then I cut myself down and begin to learn like a stump. It takes me time for me to grow back.
- ✓ I learn like a turtle because it takes awhile for me to get something but in the end I understand.
- ✓ I learn like a dog because it takes me a while to completely understand things but once I get it, I won’t forget it.
- ✓ I learn like a puppy because they are intelligent and they learn everything you teach them.
- ✓ I learn like a trash can. You put thoughts and ideas in me and they get taken out a week later.
- ✓ I learn like a sponge. I take information in quickly but if I don’t use it, it slowly seeps out.
- ✓ I learn like a tree. I keep quiet and mind my own business most of the time. I’m not too concerned with learning most of the things taught at a normal school. Trees root into the ground and try to remain unchanged.
- ✓ I learn like a shoe because I’m constantly going through the motions down a path that has been chosen for me by others.
- ✓ I learn like a door wedge because I’m usually just put where I’m told and I’m there for some purpose.
- ✓ I learn like a lamp; when I’m “on” I do my job well and when I’m “off” I don’t do much.
- ✓ I learn like a car because when I hop into gear, I accelerate quickly when I get into the swing of things.
- ✓ I learn like a clock because every second changes. One second I’m listening, the next second I’m not.
- ✓ I learn like a politician because I lie about doing my homework.
- ✓ I learn like a guy because I only remember what I want to.

- ✓ I learn like a little kid because everything they see and hear they want to touch and talk about it.
- ✓ I learn like a digestive system because I take in what I want and take out the rest.
- ✓ I learn like a rabbit because I hop my way to success.
- ✓ I learn like a frog because I leap into learning.
- ✓ I learn like a filter because when stuff goes in the useless things always come out.
- ✓ I learn like a box because I can hold information and take it out and use it. I can also store it and possibly lose it.
- ✓ I learn like a CD because in some subjects I just flow freely and in other I skip like a scratched one and in others I need things repeated like the way a favorite song is repeated over and over again.
- ✓ I learn like a snail, sort of slow, but it's the perfect speed for me.
- ✓ I learn like a piece of wood because I do not like school and I do not like to listen to teachers.
- ✓ I learn like a butterfly because sometimes they don't fly fast. They fly smoothly, steady, just how I learn.
- ✓ I learn like a vacuum because I suck up all the knowledge and it just sticks to me and I can't get rid of it until I dump it out.
- ✓ I learn like a filing cabinet because I can store lots of information in my head at once.
- ✓ I learn like a construction worker because I try to get the job done.
- ✓ I learn like a genius because I have a quick way of learning sometimes when I'm showed or told.
- ✓ I learn like a door because when the key fits it unlocks my true potential.
- ✓ I learn like a parachute because when I'm open is when I do my best.
- ✓ I learn like a tabletop. Things just get piled on top of me and after a while everything gets cluttered. Eventually I discard everything and the process starts all over again.
- ✓ I learn like a tunnel because things go in one side and out the other.
- ✓ I learn like a baby because my mind is like a sponge.
- ✓ I learn like a fish because I try to swim around the difficulties.
- ✓ I learn like a cat because I'm always curious and will try things more than once.
- ✓ I learn like a star because of my intelligence's shine.
- ✓ I learn like meatloaf because my brain is fat in the beginning and then it shrinks up when it is overheated.
- ✓ I learn like a frog because of the fact that I'm always hopping from subject to subject.
- ✓ I learn like George Bush because I get Cs in all my classes.
- ✓ I learn like a three year old because I need people to repeat things for me to really understand it.
- ✓ I learn like a child because I learn at my own pace and find many things interesting.
- ✓ I learn like a baby because I have to see how something is done before I can imitate it.
- ✓ I learn like a dog because once taught I know exactly what to do.
- ✓ I learn like a fish because I only have a five second memory.
- ✓ I learn like a sloth because I'm a slow learner.
- ✓ I learn like a cheetah because I'm a fast learner.
- ✓ I learn like a camera because I am capable of doing great things, but I need motivation. I need to know why. Just like a camera, I need the perfect light and a perfect moment, then everything is in focus. Without these things, the camera has no use. Without inspiration I am like a camera without film.

- ✓ I learn like a rock because it is hard to get through to me.
- ✓ I learn like an elephant because I never forget.
- ✓ I learn like a dead body because all I do is lay there.
- ✓ I learn like a ball of clay because teachers can mold my mind into whatever they teach.
- ✓ I learn like a parrot because after seeing something I can mimic it.
- ✓ I learn like a sponge because I absorb all of the information that is thrown at me.
- ✓ I learn like a chameleon because I adapt and change to be able to accomplish my goal but there are still things that are too big for me.
- ✓ I learn like an elevator. Some days I'm up and some days I'm down. It greatly depends on my mood that day and how much I want to apply myself.
- ✓ I learn like a slightly malfunctioning computer because I can store and absorb quite a bit of information, but it can be a bit temperamental sometimes and not perform like it should.
- ✓ I learn like a car because when I'm started up I can go places but when I'm off I'm going nowhere.
- ✓ I learn like a moth. I blend in with the class and keep quiet. I try to go unnoticed. I listen some of the time and look like I pay attention but I may just be worried about staying blended. If I am interested in the topic or if I am with my friends, I flutter towards the light, otherwise I will stay hidden in the dark.